Law magazine calls for review of US Constitution

A newly-launched Sri Lankan law magazine, the Anglo-American Lawyer Magazine, targeting the legal profession in the Anglo-American world, has called for a national conference on the review of the US Constitution.

Chief Editor and the Publisher of the Magazine, Srinath Fernando, has highlighted that the American Constitution had remained stagnant for over 200 years. The American dream and the way of life has transcended far beyond what the framers had anticipated. He says the challenges America is facing today are formidable and wide-ranging, from terrorism, climate change, cyber security, nuclear attack, to the open defiance of the rule-based behaviour by some of America's rivals in the international arena. He believes that there are multiple global challenges that are still evolving. Fernando is also the Convenor of the Constitutional Law Association of Sri Lanka.

The magazine articulates that the framers of the American Constitution could not possibly have imagined the magnitude of the challenges America is facing today. The magazine has called for a national conference on the review of the American Constitution to delve deep into the contours and intricacies of the Constitution and on what impact it had in the past or could possibly have in the future on achieving the Great American Dream.

The magazine argues that the Congress must provide the Executive sufficient leeway to deal with global challenges and the immediate review of the War Powers Act to deal with America's 'archrivals' targeting Russia and China. The appeal is made directly to the Deans of the American Law Schools. The Editor has also communicated with the US Senate Judicial Committee on the War Powers Act to counter hypersonic missiles and surprise attacks on US cyber warfare capabilities through a unique 'pre-prepared decision of the President of the US' which could be stored and activated automatically.

The magazine is a publication of the Srinath Fernando Diplomacy, a public affairs consulting establishment.
